OFFERS & FUNNELS

We don’t cut prices. We cut scope.

How our offer handles “too expensive” without a discount.

INSIDE

1 “Too expensive” is usually about trust

2 Why a discount doesn’t fix it

3 Door 1: the full system

4 Door 2: a smaller first phase

5 The bridge between them

Sukeshwar R K · Co-founder, Bizzzauto

“Too expensive” is usually about trust

A business that has never worked with us doesn’t want to put the full amount on a new vendor. That’s fair.

WHAT THEY’RE REALLY WEIGHING

- A vendor they haven’t worked with
- The full amount on day one
- No proof yet that it fits them

Why a discount doesn’t fix it

It makes the same leap of faith a little cheaper. And it tells the client our first number wasn’t real.

A DISCOUNT

- ✕ Same risk, slightly cheaper
- ✕ The first price stops looking honest

Door 1: the full system

One price for the full scope. No negotiation on it.

WHY

- Everyone pays the same for the same scope

Door 2: a smaller first phase

The one part of the business that hurts most. Less risk on day one.

WHY

- The first phase becomes the proof

The bridge between them

Want the full scope within a few months? A small top-up. After that window, it’s priced like any new build.

THE OFFER, IN ONE LINE

Shrink the risk, not the price.

“Too expensive”	→	Usually about trust
A discount	→	Same risk, cheaper
Door 1	→	Full system, one price
Door 2	→	Smaller first phase
The bridge	→	A small top-up later

How do you handle “too expensive”?

Sukeshwar R K · Co-founder, Bizzzauto